2. Discussions also take place at the level of the Labour Advisory Board (LAB) on an ad-hoc basis. The LAB is a tripartite body set up under the Labour Act 1975, as amended, consisting of an equal number of public officers, representatives of employers and representatives of workers appointed by the Minister. In practice such appointment is effected after consultation with the organizations concerned.

3. When matters to be discussed pertain to Occupational Safety and Health, they are referred to the Advisory Council for Occupational Safety and Health, a tripartite body consisting of a Chairperson, eight members representing Government, eight members representing employers, eight members representing employees and two members having wide experience in Occupational Safety and Health.
